Dartmouth Entrepreneurial Network

Molson Hart graduated from Dartmouth in 2009 with a BA in Mathematics and Economics. While at Dartmouth, he was a member of the Dartmouth Chess Team, an avid pong player, and a member of Alpha Chi Alpha. In 2010, he founded VIAHART, a manufacturer of branded consumer durables for sale online and through brick and mortar stores (check out what VIAHART makes at www.kikbo.com).

Contact Molson at www.kikbo.com if you have a question about computer programming (Python, HTML, CSS, Javascript), manufacturing abroad, product/packaging design, or e-commerce!

After graduating in June 2010, Noah Dentzel worked at Tuenti Technologies in Madrid, Spain for a year before starting the ChargeCard project. While at Dartmouth Noah double-majored in Government and Geography modified with Economics. He also wrote for The D, was chief editor of the undergraduate publication World Outlook and he audited Professor Gregg Fairbrothers entrepreneurship course at Tuck his senior year where he was bitten by the “bug.”

Following his passion for technology and education, Will Vincent T'10 joined Quizlet, an online study site for students. "In the last two years Quizlet has exploded in growth. We now reach 7 million students a month and are on pace to double again this fall." The San Francisco-based company has 10 employees and is actively scaling the team. Any interested alums should feel free to reach out to Will at will@quizlet.com.

Christina Stoltz D'06, AS'07 is an innovative social entrepreneur who has established a nonprofit/for-profit hybrid enterprise focusing on advocacy and rehabilitation conceived from her seven years of work at international crisis centers, emergency shelters, and prisons with survivors of human trafficking and gender-based violence. Ploome and REQ.1 took root in Philadelphia in 2010 and quickly gained momentum. The fitness boutique and corresponding non-profit organization have existed in various forms and across three continents since 2006. Then, as a Dartmouth graduate, founder, and president Stoltz embarked on a career in international human rights advocacy with a focus on human trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and domestic and sexual violence. Following the publication of her Masters thesis in 2007 and with the support of her Dartmouth, the US State Department, UNIFEM, international outreach organizations, and state prisons, Christina organized and facilitated community campaigns, educational programs, and artistic projects in the United States, Russia, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, and Uzbekistan to raise awareness on the issue of gender-based violence.
