She received her Juris Doctorate degree from the University of Dayton School of Law (UDSL) and received her Bachelor's degree, magna cum laude, from Vanderbilt University with a double major in Human and Organizational Development (concentration in Community Development and Social Policy), and Child Development.

While at UDSL, Amanda interned with the Honorable Mary Katherine Huffman of the Montgomery County Common Pleas Court and attended Capital University to complete the Summer Adoption Law Institute. Gilvary Symposium on Law, Religion and Social Justice. Amanda was a President's Scholarship recipient and was recognized for excellence in Advanced Legal Research. She also excelled in courses on Wills and Trusts, Estate Planning and Taxation, and Adoption. Amanda is a member of the Dayton Bar Association and sits on the advisory board of the Miami Valley Women's Center.

Prior to law school, Amanda worked for the National School Boards Association (NSBA) in Washington D.C. as program manager over a national education technology conference. She continued working for the NSBA on a contract basis even after moving to Ohio. She also interned with the International Justice Mission (IJM), a human rights agency that strives to promote functioning public justice systems and relief from oppression, and has had the honor to give presentations about the cause to various Christian Legal Society chapters.

As a NCAA Division I letter-winner on Vanderbilt's track and field team, she was named All American on three occasions, and has been privileged to share her love of the sport through Athletes in Action clinics in Costa Rica and Southeast Asia. Amanda and her husband both live in Centerville, Ohio and have two children.
