Meet the Team

We come together as leaders from different backgrounds to explore the power of inner resources for effecting positive change in our workplaces and lives. We now invite others to engage in this ongoing exploration of the power of the human spirit.

Chuck Stewart specializes in helping individuals identify and achieve life-changing goals, building on his years of coaching, consulting and project management.

Janet Drey directs the Consortium for Contemplative Leadership, integrating her work with a leadership development firm with years of ministry, including her experience as executive director of a national retreat movement for young adults.

Kevin Pokorny advises small businesses in strategic planning, conducting training, assisting in project & meeting facilitation, and acts as a listening coach for his clients.

Rethink Leadership

Leadership today requires a broad range of skills, including the ability to anticipate, innovate, question, and adapt. If we consider that the most important leadership tool is first and foremost the leader's self, it becomes critical to assist leaders in becoming more conscious of who they are, as well as the motivations influencing their leadership.

When leaders become fully present and develop an awareness of subtle patterns of their own and other's behavior, they see situations more clearly and are better able to manage and make decisions.

By deepening awareness and loosening the grip of old habits and ways of making meaning, leaders are freed up to think, relate, and act in new and more effective ways both individually and collectively.

Awaken. Cultivate. Grow.

Contemplative Leaders

Contemplative leadership attends to the inner life of leadership. It provides a critical, and often missing dimension to leadership development that is foundational for implementing other leadership methods and practices.

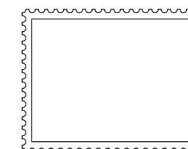

Among other things, contemplative leadership illuminates blind spots and the limiting effects of ego, as well as enlarges one's capacity for leading into the unknowns of change, managing negative emotions, and staying grounded in one's values and purpose.

"The tools and support I've been given access to as a part of this workshop have helped me become a more confident, competent, and compassionate leader. I am able to be more reflective in my decision-making, and increasingly self-aware as I operate in several different leadership roles in my organization."
