

The Bond of a Kid

Zachary Tescher

Frankenweenie starts out with a boy having a bond with his dog named Sparky. The kid, who is named Victor, also has a love for science and is very good at it. Though his only friend is his dog, his parents worry that he won't have many friends, so they sign him up for baseball. When he starts, he hits a home run into the street and Sparky does what a normal dog would and runs in the street to catch it. A car comes and kills Victor's best friend. Victor becomes very upset, but his new science teacher tells him something that he didn't know. He says that when an animal dies the wiring and nerves are still functional and if you use energy the muscles could still work. So, Victor goes home and brings his dead dog with him after school. He attracts lightning to come and the lightning hits his dog. After that the unimaginable happens--his dog comes back to life. Victor is very excited, but he knows that he has to keep it a secret or people could do bad things about it. When Victor goes to school the next day, his dog gets lonely and tries to run to him. When a kid named Edgar sees the dog, something big happens.

The movie is in black and white to tell us the story plot happened probably 40 years ago. It has a very well constructed plot and has very detailed characters. Though the movie was really good, it was predictable. Also I thought this movie was very well made and it is exciting and funny for the whole family. They should have added characters. Overall, the movie was made very well. What do you think? See Frankenweenie to find out.
