RYAN GANLEY at Speakeasy Art

Little Planets

August 3 – September 1

As a creative and expressive endeavor, Ryan Ganley has been exploring panorama photography during his several years of traveling as far as China and as close as his own back yard. His Little Planets are created by warping an image from a horizontal panoramic into a Toroid or a doughnut shape. Utilizing this technique, Ryan transforms his current panoramas into an all encompassing image. "The little planet series gives the viewer the feeling of separation between themselves and the subject, as if they were watching these planets float past..." Speakeasy Art has become known for showcasing the work of both international and local contemporary artists. In addition, the gallery offers professional custom framing as well as youth, teen and adult art classes. Speakeasy Art sets a new standard by providing a space, both interesting and accessible to all art enthusiasts.
