Finding the Still Point – Music for Healing

Ernest R. Levesque

September 2, 1942 – August 14, 2004

Ernie Levesque

My husband was a man of conviction, principle and boundless energy. Ernie's greatest joys were classical music and the wilderness. For many years, he drove the backwoods, hiked the trails and fished the lakes of British Columbia's interior. He brought wisdom and integrity to all he did including his work as an urban planner in a number of British Columbia municipalities.

Ernie was a very grounded individual and his spiritual side was harder to find. What it took me a while to understand was that inwardly, he was held up like his canoe on deep water – by his understanding of life and its lessons. From these depths came his equanimity, his courage to say what needed to be said and a clear, honest intention. At that inner level he was fluid, always able to learn and ultimately accept.

In the course of his illness with cancer, Ernie found in Healing Touch a practical application of spirituality and love. He returned time and again for the peace and comfort it brought. Wherever his journey is taking him now, I know he is travelling lightly. He has left with my love and gratitude for the gift of his life and his love.
